

COMMUNICATION AT HOME AND IN THE COMMUNITY

HELPFUL STRATEGIES & SUGGESTIONS
FROM PARENTS & FAMILIES
WITH A CHILD WHO IS DEAF-BLIND

From the 1999 National Parent Workshop sponsored by:

The National Technical Assistance Consortium for Children and Young Adults
Who Are Deaf-Blind (NTAC)

The National Family Association for Deaf-Blind (NFADB)

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The contents of this document were drawn from over one hundred parents and family members of children who are deaf-blind who attended the 1999 NTAC/NFADB national parent workshop entitled "Important Practices in Communication: Making It Happen at Home and in the Community." It is their knowledge and experience that is reflected in these pages. A sincere thank you to all of the parent experts who attended the workshop and contributed to this "little book."

INTRODUCTION

In January 1998, the National Technical Assistance Consortium for Children and Young Adults who are Deaf-Blind (NTAC) surveyed over 500 families of children who are deaf-blind to determine the most appropriate and meaningful topic for a national parent workshop. Results from this survey clearly indicated that communication was a critical issue.

During the summers of 1998 and 1999, NTAC and the National Family Association of the Deaf-Blind (NFADB) co-sponsored two national parent workshops with communication as the primary theme. For the first workshop, entitled "Going for the Best: Building Excellence and Strength Together," nearly one hundred parents from across the country were brought together in St. Louis, Missouri. These parents identified what they perceived to be the most important practices needed to effectively promote communication with their children who are deaf-blind. Their ideas were compiled in a booklet and distributed to families and professionals across the country.

The second workshop, "Important Practices in Effective Communication: Making it Happen at Home and in the Community," was attended by an even greater number of parents and family members. Participants worked together to identify strategies to put the practices identified in 1998 into action. The environments of home and community were targeted with regard to the following four questions:

- How can we facilitate and promote a child's individualized mode of communication?
- How can we increase the number of people who can effectively communicate with our children?
- How can we encourage others to respect our children and feel more comfortable interacting with them?
- How can parents support and promote communication when personal time and energy are limited?

Answers to these questions are contained within this little book. It is a wonderful collection of strategies, advice and suggestions from "parent experts."

How can we facilitate a child's individualized communication?

_____ In the home _____

- Encourage every family member to take responsibility for including and communicating with your child
- Allow your child to have other, new communication partners - it will increase his or her skills and motivation
- Attend workshops and conferences to learn about communication and deaf-blindness
- Use a communication system that is sensitive to your family's needs
- Try to be aware of natural opportunities to learn and to provide information and training
- Allow wait time for your child to respond to you or to make a request
- Being in close proximity to the child is usually required for effective communication

Establish regular routines for different activities to create common experiences to discuss with your child, e.g. weekly shopping trip

- Create a sign or communication dictionary of the words and concepts your child uses
- Use an experience book to promote conversation
- Remember, conversations need a beginning, a middle and an end
- Follow through with school instruction at home
- Provide family sign language classes - use an Internet website to learn ASL (www.handspeak.com)
- When talking to hearing persons in the presence of a child with deaf-blindness, remember to sign if the child uses sign
- Sign stories to siblings, if your child uses sign language
- If appropriate, use closed captioned TV
- Network with the deaf community
- Share resources such as web sites, CDs, and books with family members and friends

How can we facilitate a child's individualized communication?

———— In the community ————

- Model interactions with your child while in the community
- Identify key people to inform and educate so they can help find opportunities for your child to communicate in other community settings (e.g. scout leader, your child's friends)
- Tell people what your child's gestures (body language) mean so they can look for and understand your child's responses
- Explain to people that they will need to give your child plenty of time to respond
- Have a small communication dictionary available so that others can understand your child's communication system
- Share sign language books with motivated and interested people
- Check local programs that provide sensory activities, e.g., science museum, arboretum, etc.
- Provide sign language classes for care givers
- Be brief and be kind when in uncomfortable communication situations in the community
- Request Braille/picture menus in restaurants and provide community agencies with a list of restaurants that use them
- Encourage and reinforce the use of closed captioned TV and theater movies
- Advocate for sign language classes to be offered in the community for adults and children
- Explore interpreted plays in the community
- Use written notes to communicate when appropriate

How can we increase the number of people who can effectively communicate with our children?

———— In the home —————

- Expand the number of children you encourage to interact with your child - think of ways to teach them how to communicate with your child
- Give yourself permission to let other people do some of the communicating
- Begin small, with a circle of good communicators, then bring in more people
- Teach immediate and extended family members about your child - let them know what your child likes to do, e.g. games, snacks, etc.
- Encourage other family members to communicate by modeling how to do it
- At family meals, give others an opportunity to communicate with your child who is deaf-blind - leave the room - talk to your family about what happens when you do
- Recognize that our kids are kids and they will interact with different family members in different ways - they will do different things for Dad or Grandma than they will do for Mom
- Invite kids from the neighborhood who are near your child's age into your home! Make your home welcome and fun for others. Teach neighborhood children the best way to interact with your child
- Increase opportunities for partial participation
- Acknowledge the increased effort that is required of your child to participate in the family activities
- Label items in your home environment with your child's favored communication (e.g., sign, symbols, words) so everyone can use the same language
- Allow your child to engage in "typical" interactions in your house with siblings and their friends
- Parent to parent networking can lead to playmate/companion connection
- When siblings ask to help, allow them to help to the best of their abilities
- Have easy access to sign language books
- Use a communication book
- Use games of all kinds to teach - siblings can be the teachers
- Use homemade materials, such as a communication book or calendar box, to share information about your child's communication

How can we increase the number of people who can effectively communicate with our children?

In the community

- Don't be an island -- others in the community may actually interact very well with our kids, which is not what we probably expect to happen
- Continue your community involvement, e.g. church, library, shopping, recreation, and bring your child - introduce them to everyone - soothe over any awkwardness
- When you notice other people's curiosity, offer information if they are interested - encourage interaction - other kids are often more open to these experiences than adults - they can become ambassadors for our kids, telling their parents about a new acquaintance
- Give others an opportunity to volunteer to do things with your child
- Use opportunities to demystify the differences between our children and others
- Check into age appropriate community organizations and activities and give your child an opportunity to participate
- Encourage school and other community resources to include your child in field trips and activities - help them understand how if they don't know
- Frequent local merchants such as the hairdresser, gas station, bakery, convenience store - go to the same place on a regular basis - start doing this early in your child's life - repeated exposure is important
- Provide information or in-service on your child's communication for church groups, bible schools
- Join a playgroup in your area - establish peer connections by using a peer "social tutor" who could help increase relationships with other peers - this person could initially be paid but hopefully could be faded out
- Check senior programs, big brother/sister program for possible communication partners
- Model...model... model... good communication, e.g. touch cues, turn taking, correct social behavior
- After modeling communication, suggest "you try" and step back and give others the opportunity - it's not about communicating perfectly but about making opportunities available
- Have an intervenor with your child in the community
- Think of different ways to explain your child's communication system to others - suggestions include: videotapes of your child, pictures of your child demonstrating signs he uses, homemade cards with key words and pictures, a communication dictionary
- Recognize that not all people will respond well to your child and know that you don't owe everyone an explanation

How can we encourage others to respect our children and feel more comfortable interacting with them?

———— In the home —————

- Demonstrate pride in communicating with your child - be visible in doing this and your enthusiasm will rub off on others
- Whenever possible, redirect family and friends to communicate directly with your child
- Be open to visits from extended family - write a friendly note prior to the visit with suggestions for interacting and communicating with your child
- Motivate and empower family members to interact with your child - show them you are confident in their abilities
- Model and explain to all family members what your expectations are - involve family in developing teaching strategies
- Encourage family and friends to have physical contact with your child
- Find ways to demonstrate your child's abilities to help reduce other people's fear and awkwardness
- Make sure your child is an active, involved member of the family
- Encourage family members to participate in your child's daily routine by pairing siblings to do chores - encourage your child's partial participation in the activities
- Help your child be as self-sufficient as possible so others don't get upset or resentful that they have to help
- Give responsibilities to your child that match his or her abilities and continually raise expectations
- Be a normal family - demonstrate kindness - show respect
- Talk about positive events, such as birthday parties and swimming, rather than negative events or problems all the time
- Encourage spouse to spouse discussions of the issues
- Advocate for more training for fathers and siblings - involve fathers and community members by giving up control (moms)
- Accept negative attitudes from some family members if necessary, but continue to teach by example

How can we encourage others to respect our children and feel more comfortable interacting with them?

———— In the community —————

- Take your child out! Be a part of the community - take risks - explore
- Don't expect special treatment but look for ways to be involved
- Aim high! Be proud of your child or family member
- Present your child as a "kid" first - get to know other kids in the community and find ways to involve your child with them
- Demonstrate patience so others see it and model it, as well - allow time for people to feel comfortable
- Whenever possible, encourage people to talk directly to your child instead of talking about her while she is right there
- Explain your child's abilities and needs to other parents so they can share information with their own children
- Heighten awareness in public places - talk to people - teach one person at a time
- Promote awareness programs in the community
- Whenever possible, pick the same person to deal with at the store, restaurant, etc. - model communication with your child - step back and let them communicate
- If someone is interested or curious, reach out to them, don't make them make the first move
- Facilitate physical contact by explaining to others why touch is important for a person who doesn't see and hear
- Start friendships at an early age - teach friends how to use your child's communication devices
- Invite friends of siblings over so that the child can meet and interact with new friends - ask them "what's cool" - replace activities, clothes, etc. that are not age-appropriate
- Publicly recognize the contributions of community members and supporters
- Write stories of positive examples of community participation to share with other parents and community members
- To the greatest extent possible, teach your child self-determination and self-advocacy so he can speak for himself

How can we support communication when time and energy is limited at home and in the community?

- Don't worry about teaching all the time - let home be different from school
- Pick your battles - set your priorities
- Be aware of your child's energy level - determine his or her peak performance time of the day and focus attention and skill building activities for that time
- Pay attention to your child's mental and emotional health needs
- Be aware of sleeping patterns - make sure everyone is aware of medications and side effects
- Anticipate and pay attention to stressful or potentially stressful situations
- Infuse communication into everyday family life
- Make it simple - when a lot is going on stay with the basics
- Be consistent with cues and signs but allow for individual styles
- Don't reinvent the wheel - seek information from professionals and other parents
- Divide and delegate tasks among family members
- Do pre-planning:
 - ✓ have a printed list of your child's routine available for others
 - ✓ have hearing aids and devices accessible and in working order
 - ✓ pre-conference with doctors and medical staff to provide information and expectations for each appointment
- Be aware of your own energy level:
 - ✓ ask for help - seek respite - having a break is important
 - ✓ accept appropriate help from others
 - ✓ take care of your own physical & mental health
 - ✓ exercise and play
- Understand and protect your own and your family's boundaries
- Don't try to be the "perfect" parent:
 - ✓ be flexible
 - ✓ compromise
 - ✓ be able to say NO!
 - ✓ give yourself time and space
 - ✓ look at your daily schedule for ways to make it easier

Published by

The National Technical Assistance Consortium for Children and Young Adults Who Are Deaf-Blind

| | | |
|--|-----|---|
| Western Oregon University Teaching Research Division 345 N. Monmouth Avenue Monmouth, OR 97361 Voice: 503.838.8391 TTY: 503.838.9623 FAX: 503.838.8150 | and | Helen Keller National Center 111 Middle Neck Road Sands Point, NY 11050 Voice: 516.944.8900 ext. 311 TTY: 516.883.9059 FAX: 516.883.9060 |
|--|-----|---|

E-mail: ntac@wou.edu

Website: <http://www.tr.wou.edu/ntac/>

National Family Association for Deaf-Blind

111 Middle Neck Road

Sands Point, NY 11050

Voice: 800.255.0411 x275

FAX: 516.883.9060

Website: <http://www.cpd.usu.edu/nfadb/>

Funded through grant number H025C60001 by the U.S. Department of Education, OSERS, Office of Special Education Programs. The opinions and policies expressed by this publication do not necessarily reflect those of NTAC or the U.S. Department of Education.